Western Union translation code So what is MTCN? This acronym means the money transfer management number, which means the number needed to control the beneficiary. For the WU system, this control number is made up of ten (10) digits. This number is given to the sender after the shipment. This number is then transferred to the recipient, so it showed it when the payment was received. The system states that without a passport and no recipient will be able to receive a transfer. But is it really so? In fact, it's a little different. In some countries, historically, if a person calls his name, he trusted. And even the Bank does not check the passport when conducting financial transactions on the account or money transfers. With such traditions I think, and check this control number as follows: - Do you know MTCN? Yes, of course! Well, here's your translation. So don't believe the scammers that it's not impossible to get a translation without it. When transferring the translation, the translation may even work a secret question and answer, which must be checked with the issuance of the payment. BUT, as has already been stated that the money transfer system is not intended for business, then, most likely, the secret issue is irrelevant. Because when sending money to a relative it is assumed that only he knows that he will be transferred, and no other namesakes come to receive translation. And operators can forgive the recipient if they say you forgot to answer and didn't hear the phone so they couldn't make a secret answer. The moneyGram reference number for money transfer system MoneyGram has a similar code - the reference number on which the reference number is listed. This number consists of 8 digits. Even from the name of this room it is clear that this number is only to speed up payment, so that it was easier to find on your computer, and to correct data, for example, over the phone. But it doesn't function as a password that can limit the issuance of a translation. If this number needs to have a function, perhaps it will protect the name number, password or something. But again, in this case, there is no certainty that the systems will restrict the issuance of remittances on the ground, without this password. The Translation Control Number for LeaderMT Money Transfer System Leader) has its own so-called translation control number - transaction control number - abbreviation CNT. Unlike other systems, the room contains a strict number of numbers in the room. The CNT room can contain 9 to 16 characters. Of course, security is unlikely to affect in any way. But looking at this room you just can't say that you made a mistake in recording that number by at least one digit or not, which certainly doesn't add to the convenience. Suddenly missed while writing one small unremarkable figure, and it is unknown whether the translation of the non-existent number or not. But it's certainly not fatal. The number of transfers for the money transfer system Anelik has only a transfer number has a number of transfers. The number has MFAN/963852 and is only intended to track translation status. To track the need and transfer date. Protecting the transfer from scammers How can you secure a money transfer from intercepting their scammers? Is there an effective way? Alas, 100% protection in principle does not exist. In any country there can be diligent people who can find accomplices in the Bank, and get your transfer, even if you send it under the name. All transfers are issued by banks. And the bank - not the police, will not carry out the examination of fake passports. Therefore, do not use Western Union, MoneyGram or other remittances to pay for goods and services. Especially in other countries. Even if you even need to send money to relatives - agree with them in advance about the time of transfer. Then, if they get it within an hour of being submitted, your chances of losing the translation will be minimal. Otherwise, the accomplices of the scammers can follow the new translation and send information about it to their accomplices...
